

In the words of OHRP, "Publishing something does not make it research and not publishing something does not make it research. Research is a process of inquiry that is designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events."

Research is a process of inquiry that is designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.

Research is a process of inquiry that is designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.

x An oral history or journalistic piece that is limited to documenting or reporting on specific people, events, or places in specific contexts. It is not intended to draw broad conclusions about people, events, or places.

x Classes, independent studies, and honors projects that are being conducted for training purposes.

Research is a process of inquiry that is designed to contribute to generalizable knowledge that can be used to understand people or events.